Sue Jenkins

Jay and Sue Jenkins worked as linguist-translators among the Wamey people in Senegal and Guinea, West Africa for over 30 years. Genesis and the New Testament were dedicated in both Guinea and Senegal in December of 2018 and January 2019. They are now living in Milton, NH where they continue to work from a distance with help from Pioneer Bible Translators. Sue continues to work with a new focus: to create helps, such as phone Apps, to better equip and engage the Wamey people in the use of their mother tongue Scriptures. Grandparents to five grandsons and one granddaughter they are delighted to be able to provide a home in New Hampshire where their three "missionary kids" can come gather with their families.

Topics

Our speakers from Wycliffe will be covering all areas of Bible translation including, linguistics, technology and community. There will also be a Q&A as the last session for things left unsaid. We will also be discussing church responsibility when it comes to missions and outreach.

Lynn Conver

Lynn and Jeannette joined Wycliffe in 1983, training as linguist/translators. When health issues blocked them from living overseas, they began a displaced language project, working with a group of Southeast Asian refugees in Seattle from 1991 until 2004. They were able to draft most of the New Testament and portions of the Old Testament into that previously unwritten language. Lynn has also taught linguistics at public and Christian colleges, and served as a linguistics consultant. He currently serves as an editor with Global Publishing Services, part of the academic arm of Wycliffe. He and Jeannette live in Essex Junction, Vermont. They have four adult children (including twin daughters who serve with Wycliffe in Southeast Asia) and two grandchildren. Lynn is passionate about God's Word and about helping Christians discern how they might become involved in His plan to bring the nations to Himself!

Brian Chapaitis

Brian Chapaitis graduated with an M.S.E.E. in Integrated Circuit design from Cornell University many years ago. While working with IBM in Vermont, he followed God's call to overseas work using his technical skills, by joining Wycliffe Bible Translators. He first met his wife, Dr. Helen in Vermont. Later he served in Papua New Guinea with WBT and SIL for 32 years. His last assignments there were related to national training efforts for future PNG Bible Translators, although many expatriates benefited as well. Brian has been applying computer-based tools toward Language Development since the dawn of personal computers, back in 1984. He served for many years representing the Pacific Area as the Area's Language Technology Coordinator. Together, with Dr. Helen, they continue to serve God and the local church communities through their technical and medical skills as worldwide consultants.
